THE CRICKET OF LEEDS

By J. AUBREY TYSON (Copyright, The Frank A. Munsey Co.)

The Telltale Portrait. 8 the superintendent of the Leeds police and the detective from Scotland Yard gased at each other, their faces were pale and

"What reason have you for believing that these are the darbies taken from Quillan?" he asked. "They are of the sort that are used in nearly every city in the United Kingdom.

Taking the handcuffs from Kirkwood
Ross pointed to four nicks on one of he steel circlets.

"Two years ago, when Quillan started out to find the members of the Hamilout to find the members of the Hamilford Bank gang. I gave him these darbies," Ross explained. "They're bright and new, without a nick in 'em; and they're made for this job, said I. They'll have four nicks in 'em before the next fortnight is out, said he, and he kept his word. There were four members of the gang; Quillan, single-handed, took them one by one. As he took each of them, he filed a nick on one of the darbies—filed it while the bracelet was on the wrist of the prisbracelet was on the wrist of the pris-These are the same nicks, lad; and by them I know the darbles I gave to Quillan-the darbies which the Crick-et took from him when he put him out."

Young Ward-Quillan's mate. He's handling the affair pretty well, but I want you to give him a leg-up. The thing is pretty clear. Ridgeley had an office in one of his mills, on the south bank of the Aire. The office was on the ground floor, overlooking the river, which washes one of the mil walls. To this office the Cricket went at 7 o'clock last night. Oh, we went at 7 o'clock last night. Oh, we have his description, to the dot, from one of the mill watchmen! There can be no mistake!

"Ridgeley, who seldom remained at the mill after 5 o'clock, stayed until after closing hours last night. All the employes, except three watchmen, left at 5. One of these watchmen—a man named Finch—was sitting at his employes, except three watchmen, left at 5. One of these watchmen—as man named Finch—was sitting at his post, at the main entrance to the mill, when Ridgeley came out and told him to go to a tobacconist's, about ten minutes' walk distant, for a box of cigars of a certain brand. 'If you can't get them there, go to Bassett's, he said. Bassett's tobacco shop is on this side of the Aire.

"Finch remarked that he had better first call one of the two other watchmen to take his place at the door. Ridgeley told him that such action was unnecessary. 'I'll be around here until you come back, said he. He gave the man the money for the cigars, and Finch hurried off.

"At the first tobacconist's Finch was unable to get the brand of cigars he sought, so he went on to Bassett's. There he got them, and returned immediately to the mill. He was gone a little more than half an hour.

"As the watchman drew near the gate to the mill yard, he saw a man walking toward him with unsteady steps. It was dark by this time, and Finch, wondering what had brought the stranger so near the Ridgeley mill at such an hour, stepped behind a pile of packing boxes.

"As the man approached" the watchman, from his place of concealment, saw the stranger take off his straw haf. This was badly crushed and twisted; the man, pausing under a street lamp, attempted to straighten the bent straw. The light of the lamp revealed the stranger's features plainly—high-bridged nose, white cow-lick, and all. Finch watchman may on the point of advancing and asking the man what he did there, but, fortunately for him, per-the watchman was on the point of advancing and asking the man what he did there, but, fortunately for him, perhaps, he did not do so.

"At length the Cricket started on again in the direction of the central part of the town; the watchman, a prey to some apprehension, continued on his way to the mill. There he found the entrance door closed, but unlocked. He went in and made his way to his employer's office. The door to this was locked. Finch knocked, but got no response. He called Ridgeley by name. Still there was no answer.

locked. Finch knocked, but got no response. He called Ridgeley by name. Still there was no answer.

"When Finch left the mill there had been a light in Ridgeley's office. This was now extinguished. The other watchmen were stationed in distant parts of the big building. Finch drew out his watchman's whistle and blew it shrilly two or three times. In a few moments Waller, one of the other men, laurried to him.

shrilly two or three times. In a tew moments Waller, one of the other men, hurried to him.

"Hastily Finch told his comrade what had happened. Waller then said that a few minutes before he had heard a sound like the slamming of a door or the failing of some heavy body to the floor, and that he had been engaged in a vain attempt to discover its cause when he heard Finch's whistle.

"The two men had just decided to break in the door of Ridgeley's office when McClellan, the third watchman, came up in response to Finch's signal. He said that he had not heard the strange sound which startled Waller.

"The door to Ridgeley's room was quickly forced. All was dark within, but the three watchmen became conscious to the fact that one of the windows was open. Finch struck a match and lighted the gas.

"The three men saw that, save for themselves, there was no one in the room. Around them, however, were unmistakable evidences of a desperate struggle. A small table and several chairs had been overturned. One of the inkstands which belonged on Ridgeley's desk was in a corner on the floor; there were blood-status on the carpet and on one of the walls. More than this, there were blood-status on the carpet and on one of the walls. More than this, there in the air.

"In a small closet the watchman."

in the air.

"In a small closet the watchman found Ridgeley's hat hanging on a peg; his walking stick stood below it, in a corner. That was the last that was seen of Ridgeley until his, body was found under Wellinston bridge tonight, with the darbles on his wrists, Evidently the body was tied to a stone or some other heavy weight, and sunk into the Aire. From this weight the current of the river probably wrenched the rope loose."

Kirkwood critically examined the severed ends of the rope.
"Something stronger than the force of the current broke this," he muttered.
"Were there gunshot wounds in the body?"

"No. There were several bruises, but no open wounds—no wounds from which had flowed."
"Yet, you say, there were bloodsteins in the room."
The superintendent nodded.
"It is blain that Ridgeley put up a hard fight in self-defense," he said. "The blood was unquestionably that of the Cricket."

hard fight in self-defense," he said.
"The blood was unquestionably that of the Cricket."

"If all this happened last night, how does it come that the disappearance of Ridgeley was not reported to you before this evening."

Ross scowled darkly as he replaced the handcoffs in the drawer from which he had taken them.

"Young Ridgeley was a queer sort."
he explained; "and there were times when even some of his most intimate a friends scarcely knew what to make of him. Occasionally he would disappear for two or three days at a time. He was aggressive, too-pretty handy with his fists, and none too careful about whom he offended. Like a good many sons of rich men, he seemed to think i that he had the right of way wherever he went.

"His employers knew of these peculhe went.
"His employers knew of these pecul-isrities; and when the three watchmen saw that a struggle had taken place in the office, they were none too sure as to whether it had been Ridgeley or the mysterious stranger who had been the assailant, or which of them had done up the other. They thought that Ridgeley might turn up all right, and that, if they reported the matter to us, they might get him into some sort of trouble."

his ability to get out of tight places, and is well named. One can't tell where one of his leaps is going to land him next."

Kirkwood was starting in the direction of the door when one of the local detectives entered hurriedly, closely followed by a clean-shaw.n. sparely built young man of about twenty-three years of age.

"Better wait, Mr. Kirkwood," said the Loods detective, as he saw that the man from Scotland Yard was about to leave the room.

Kirkwood halted, and looked at the speaker curiously.

"What is it, Purdow? asked the superintendent quickly.

"This is Mr. Caldrake, of the Herald, sir." replied Purdow. "He says his paper has a queer sort of announcement concerning young Ridgely."

"We've met before, I think," said the superintendent, shaking hands with the newspaper man. "If you have anything that will help us out in this Ridgeley affair, let us have it as quickly as you can. We need all the help we can get, I'm afraid."

The young man took a slip of paper from his pocket.

"It is a communication that came to us by post this morning," he said. "Posted at Leeds last night. We have wired to Edinburgh, and have learned that the statement here given is correct. Here is the communication that we received."

Ross took the paper and read aloud:

Editor of the Herald:

Dear Sir—In the interest of my sister, whose maiden name was Mary Rylance, and also in the interest of the Ridgeley Mills, I desire that publicity be given to the fact that, on August 10, 1901, Mary Rylance was married to Thomas Ridgeley in the Chapel of the Covenant, in Worfell street, Edinburgh, by the Rev. James Macdonough. For reasons best known to himself, Mr. Ridgeley has caused the marriags to be kept secret. All necessary proofs of the performance of the ceremony are in the possession of my sister, and may be fully corroborated by the minister of the chapel, and by the minister of the chapel, an be fully corroborated by the register of the chapel, and by the minister who officiated. Yours very truly, DAVID RYLANCE.

MARKET MAINTAINS STEADINESS AND STRENGTH DESPITE EURO-PEAN WAR.

NEW YORK, Oct. 19.—The foreign sit-NEW TORK, Oct. 19.—The foreign situation served only to keep the market from going higher than it did, evidently. Steel opened and closed at 75%, a fraction above yesterday's close. Union Pacific was a little stronger, possibly on expectation of a favorable decision in the Minnesota rate case.

The week's market is fairly well libitstrated by today's trading in that it shows the case with which the foreign selling has been taken. The war situation is one which has been feared for years, and buying here indicates a great confidence.

Bradstreet's reports 187 business fail
The bank statement showed average loans decreased $50,000; deposits decreased $3,587,100.

Canadian Pacific held up well, opening ¼ up, and closing only ¼ under yesterday's close.

Reading was slightly soft, opening an eighth under yesterday and closing a haif still lower.

The weekly actual bank statement showed average loans decreased $50,000,000, and reserves increased $3,587,100.

Weather fine; track fast. Returning Inspectors Ordered To Pay Fare

The Interstate Commerce Commission today voted to issue an order forbidding the railroads to issue free transportation to postoffice inspectors returning to duty or to their homes from pleasure trips.

The commission also voted that interest should be paid by the railroads on all overcharge claims from the time the amount of money to be refunded was improperly collected.
